Flowers School of Technology and Management partners with Gatlin International to present online career training courses

LONDON – Flowers School of Technology and Management recently partnered with Gatlin International, the world’s largest elearning provider to governments, corporations and universities, to unveil new online career training courses. Available at <http://www.FlowersSchool.co.uk>, the certificate courses are open enrolment and cover healthcare and fitness, business and professional, hospitality and gaming, IT and software development, management and corporate, media and design, as well as skilled trades and industrial.

Flowers’ non-credit courses can help individuals at any stage of their career. Whether the student is interested in switching careers, obtaining advanced skills and certificates, or a first-time job seeker in need of specialized training, Flowers and Gatlin International provide the necessary online learning resources.

Gatlin programmes blend various types of instruction in a unique format that provides a logical, comprehensive and effective education. The typical course combines online instructional content, traditional textbook material and instructor-facilitated lessons. Though the courses are self-paced, personal instructors are available to guide every student. This blended learning differentiates Flowers and Gatlin International courses from ordinary online courses.

“The dramatic growth in Internet access around the world has secured elearning as a viable tool in education,” said Gillian Duncan, managing director of Gatlin International. “Now Flowers School of Technology and Management students can advance their skills and obtain career certificates through the convenience of working from their personal computer and at their own pace.”
